BATTING EYE KEEPS HEROES MANY YEARS IN BASEBALL

Great Batters Last Longest in Diamond Game Because When Legs Give Out They Still Possess the Big Clout That Wins in a Pinch.

ROM big Dan Brouthers, who used to knock 'em over the right field fence of the old Baltimore Club and at other places to Wee Willie Keeler, batting heroes have always held the greatest place in the affections of the baseball fans. The careers of the great batters have been long, for the batting eye isn't subject to the dreaded enemy of the ball player-"charley horse." This page could be filled with the names of batters who have made themselves famous by pounding the unresisting horse-hide. And they were men of all sorts, kinds and conditions, except in one way. Always they have been in prime physical condition, for a good batter is like a sharpshooter—he needs a cool head, a quick eye and a pair of broad shoulders to put behind the swing of the willow bat. You have to go back a long way to "Pop" Anson, Dan Brouthers and the rest of the historic hard hitters who made baseball America's greatest sport. But their names are never forgotten by the real fans, and their

ball player he was. Why, in one game Dan knocked out three home units and never cracked a smile.

Contrast Dan's style with that of Wee Willie, who was the most scientific hitter we ever had. Keeler used to grasp his bat near the middle and chop at the ball. His teammates boasted that you could put a peach basket down anywhere on the field and Willie would drop the ball into the basket. At bunting he was a marvel. He had the eye of a hawk. In 1897 Willie led the big league in batting. He batted 432. Which was prefty good for a fellow who didn't gare to be a "fence-huster,"

"Pop" Anson, most famous of old-times heldween 1879 and 1888. And it was something to lead the league during those years.

One of the greatest batsmen that ever lived was Ed Delahanty, one of "the" Delahantys, who played with Philadelphia Nationals and succeeded Willie Keeler as leading batter in 1898. Ed was a powerful big fellow and a tremendous hitter.

Third time up Ed knocked the ball over the right field fence again for another home run.

The fourth time up he knocked the ball to the clubhouse back of centre field for a third home run.

In the ninth inning Delahanty came to bat again. The fielders retreated to the fences. Lange played back between the club houses. Delahanty cracked the ball over centre field to the roof of one club house. It hounced to the roof of the other and rolled down. Ed scored his fourth home run.

Dan Brouthers a Super-Man.

It was back in 1879 that Dan Brouthers began his major league baseball career. Dan was a super-man. A friend of mine, Dr. J. M. Breen, a dentist teils me that he once looked over the famous batter's teeth, and found that he had two complete rows on both upper and lower jaws. "Double rows of teeth, like a shark," said Dr. Breen, "and every tooth as perfect as a piece of china. My, what a bite big Dan had!"

He was soon yanked back to the big league in the East, and before long was taken in charge by John McGraw, then of the saitlimere Americans. Donlin did his great batting for McGraw, He saved many games with timely ninth-tuning clouds. Mike left the Gunts to go on the stage, and was out of the game for years. On his return he found that his old speed had left him. But he still had the batting eye, as he proved when traded to Boston, where he hammered the ball as well as when

One of the greatest ballplayers of all time is Hans Wagner, the Pirate, Honus is and always has been a brawny, angular fellow, built on the mention that little incident down in 1871 he batted over 190, and in 1871 he batted over the right field fence—which was considered an impossible feat.

The other players smiled, but big Dan, bling his determination, went out in his next turn at but and a wung at the first ball offered. They saly that ball went straight toward the right field fence, about twenty feet from the ground. The players calmly discussed its flight and guessed it would drop about twenty feet from the ground. The second time he drove a liner over short to Dahlen. The hall we hall the second time hall we hall we hall the second time hall we hall we hall we hall we have some spices as down to a great trio—Cobb. Baker and Speaker. But for his unfortunate death, not long afterward, Delahanty might have been cracking them out of bounds still. He was one of five brothers, all of whom were famous ball players.

Leaving the old-timers who have dropped out of the game entirely we'll glance at a few of more modern days. There was Mike Donlin, a mighty slugger, who had a varied career on many teams and behind the footlights, Mike was a natural scrapper and a natural ballplayer. He went to

The onward sweep of the Giants which has brought them a four-teenth straight victory and third place in the National League was emphasized yesterday by the ease with which they staugntered George Tyler, the one best bet of the Braves' pitching staff. Stallings handed them the toughest bird he had in the shop in an effort to break the winning streak, but the great southpaw was swept fort to break the winning streak, but the great southpaw was swept aside as if he had been a busher fresh from the sticks. In fact, the Giants hit harder against the Boston star than they have against any of the ordinary hurlers out West. Stallings is now in a dilemma. Having sacrificed his strongest man, he has no good pitcher for a comeback. Dick Rudolph has been in a slump and there is little hope of his stemming the tide. It looks like a good chance to run that winning streak into a world's record.

The Palace Stable, whose connections are about the wisest speculators on the track, failed in its efforts to put over two goods things in Estimable and Cy Merrick. Estimable contributed her share by winning the second race, but Cy wasn't quite good enough to beat Charmeuse in the last. The Palace Stable is noted for picking out "soft spots" and then betting. Short prices don't matter, it seems, as long as the horse looks a reasonably sure thing.

Of course there is always an excuse for the average two-year-old, and in this instance there was one for Leonie, in that she swerved to the rall shortly after the start. Madden's pair, although making their first appearance in public, didn't swerve, They ran straight and true, particularly Cheer, and at the end drew away to a victory that might be termed easy.
